P (JESUIT OF PRICE DOWN THE STATE LINE. At sunrise of the 24th, the troops now comprising the Army of the Border were on the march. The rear of Prices Army had encamped eight or ten miles to the south. The advance, with their immense train and imperfectly armed division of conscripts, volunteers and bushwhackers, under a BrigadierGeneral Tyler, the prisoners and Provost Guard, and the division under Marmaduke, was at least five miles further. The rebel army moved with great celerity, being all mounted. It marched, as appeared from its broad and massively marked trails, in two columns of companies, one on each side of the Prairie road, with artillery, etc. , in the centre. The 1st Division was under Major-General James G. Blunt, and consisted of the volunteers of the department of Kansas (except Moonlights Brigade) and the militia from...
