Excerpt: .certainly exclude the presence of the disease. To begin with, the reaction is not found with any certainty until the fifth or sixth week after the infection, and rarely it may be further delayed; that is to say, the blood may still yield a negative result after the primary sore has been in evidence for some time, and after the patient has already acquired his immunity. This is evidence that the reaction is not dependent on the production of an anti-syphilitic immune substance in the serum, analogous to that developed in other infective diseases, such as typhoid. It is true that many skilled bacteriologists can foretell with more or less accuracy the probability of a positive result in the near future, although the blood is negative at the time; and in consequence the clinician is sometimes requested by the bacteriologist, in these cases, to send a further sample of blood after a short interval. Again, in late syphilis there are cases in which the patient shows undoubted evidence of the disease, while the blood gives a negative reaction; or the blood may be rendered negative temporarily by treatment, but if no further therapeutic measures are taken, in a few months active syphilitic lesions may show themselves, and on examination the blood may prove to have turned positive again. So that a single negative verdict should on no account mislead the physician into discharging the patient as cured. So many physicians unfortunately place such reliance...
