The doctor s treatment consisted, from what I could learn, of Secale Cornutum internally, and Salt Solution injected per hypodermic into abdominal cavity; these injections were repeated at different times; patient became weaker and suffered great pain. At this stage, of about a week s duration, relatives and friends insisted patient should try homeopathy. This decision was strengthened by the fact that the attending doctor gave them to understand he nor anyone else could do no more; that patient would die. The doctor was dismissed. I was called and found patient s condition as follows: Very weak, anemic, pulse accelerated, temperature 103 degrees, complaining of weight in head, roaring in ears, and pain in abdomen. Upon examination I found that a large abscess had formed near umbilicus, evidently produced by the careless use of the hypodermatic needle, or the infection may have...
